During Asa's childhood in Lagos, she was influenced by the sounds of artists like Marvin Gaye, Fela Kuti, Bob Marley, and Aretha Franklin. She often felt sad and out of place as a child and music became her escape route as well as her daydream. However, with a name meaning "little falcon" it was evident that she possessed a will of iron. 20 years later she returned to Paris, her birthplace, and her life as an artist took wing. On her eponymous album, her free spirit shines through in songs where humor is never far from emotion, and the melodies are unstoppable. R&B rubs against pop, sensuality intertwines with spirituality, rebellion with wisdom, and Asa succeeds in creating a highly personal yet universal sound that will undoubtedly cross all frontiers, not just geographical, but also those of the heart and soul.
